What was the role?

- Assist the organization in with water quality monitoring, outreach and reporting activities.
- With permission, and following community protocols, incorporate knowledge from Indigenous activities to educate others on watershed health. Indigenous activities could include guided tours, storytelling, or craft workshops, where appropriate
- Work to connect with community knowledge keepers or Elders and help provide an introduction to the significance and interconnectedness of the watershed to community culture and history.
- Assist with the development and delivery of communication, education, and outreach events and materials related to water quality and watersheds.
- Participate in weekly team meetings and provide regular program reports to the Executive
- Assist with RDRWA events and meetings, and other outreach duties as required.
- Youth would submit a formal report on work experience with RDRWA at the end of the summer with ideas on integration of traditional knowledge information into the State of the Watershed Report.

Red Deer River Watershed Alliance

August 25, 2023

Abstract:

This paper thoroughly investigates the summer position at the Red Deer River Watershed Alliance – RDRWA, that was primarily funded by the RDRWA and additionally by the Canadian Student Grant. This paper details statistics made throughout the time spent at the RDRWA as well as an in-depth description to detail the ongoings of the position held here over the four-month period from May to August 2023. This position was meant to illustrate outcomes for youth included experience in integrated community development and development of leadership, communication, and teamwork skills. The summer position at the RDRWA was intended to include ideas on integration of traditional Indigenous knowledge information into the State of the Watershed Report.
